Mission Briefing: Mission 1 – Aerial Theatre

Plunder of Okamec

The inner world of Okamec was once a jewel of the Loppian System — golden temples rising above lush jungles, its skies filled with trading skiffs and the songs of prosperous Saurian hosts. Then the miasma came.

Now the planet is a rotting paradise. Fungal cathedrals pierce the toxic haze. Rivers of slime carry the whispers of Plague Daemon Poisonzeal. Ancient treasures still gleam beneath layers of decay: Voidcrown fragments, priceless Saurian relics, and stockpiles of pre-plague technology ripe for the taking. Long-term occupation is suicide. The miasma eats through seals, fouls engines, and drives even the toughest warriors mad within days. Yet the spoils are too rich to ignore.

Word of the windfall has drawn warbands, mercenary companies, corporate strike teams, cult raiders, and opportunistic warlords from across the Loppian System and beyond. Your army is among them. Whether you fight for survival, profit, forbidden knowledge, glory, or simple bloody conquest, the objective is the same: drop fast, grab what you can, and get off-world before the planet claims you.

High-altitude insertion craft scream through the poisoned skies. Drop pods and aerial transports disgorge troops straight into the ruins while rival forces clash overhead. Every faction has its own reasons for being here tonight:

- Some seek critical spare parts to keep their fleets or factories running.

- Others hunt relics or xenotech that could shift the balance of power in the wider war.

- Mercenaries chase fat contracts and whatever they can carry in their holds.

- Cults and rogue elements chase power, madness, or glory in the miasma's twisted gifts.

There is no time for grand strategy or holding ground. Strike hard, seize the objectives, destroy anyone who stands in your way, and exfiltrate with the loot. The planet does not forgive hesitation.

The skies above the ruins of Okamec are your battlefield. The winner is the force that plunders the most and still has troops left to fly away when the last transport lifts off.

Good hunting. The miasma waits for no one.